Hives in Pets

What are Hives?

Frequent and furious scratching is often the first tell tail sign that allergies are a problem. You may notice that your pet seems to be scratching incessantly, and their skin may even become raw and inflamed. On close inspection, you may notice red, raised welts and bumps on your pet's skin, similar to mosquito bites – these could be hives.

Hives are a type of skin reaction where the skin becomes raised and irritated. While they aren't particularly serious, and don't usually last more than a few days, they are incredibly itchy and some cats and dogs with hives may even scratch themselves raw in an attempt to relieve itchy skin.

What Causes Hives?

Hives are most frequently caused by allergies. Some pets are incredibly sensitive and may develop skin allergies to various environmental or food allergens. Your pet could be allergic to something in its food, or to environmental irritants such as household cleaning agents, plant sap or pollen. Other less common causes of hives include insect stings, side-effects of pharmaceutical drugs and stress.

Natural Remedies

There are a variety of natural ingredients that can help relieve the itchiness caused by allergies and to encourage optimal skin and coat health. The homeopathic ingredient Arum triph. has a long history of use in the treatment of itchy skin conditions including feline and canine hives. It is also highly recommended for pets whose allergies are seasonal.

Other homeopathic ingredients include Chamomilla which is an incredibly soothing ingredient that helps to relieve irritated skin, and Viola tri. is known for its ability to treat a number of skin conditions and relieve allergy-related itchiness.

Herbal ingredients such as Horsetail and Dandelion work to promote skin and coat health while helping to maintain overall body health. Fucus vesiculosus is another natural ingredient often recommended to improve skin and coat condition in cats and dogs with hives.

lengthily process of elimination, but it will be well worth it when you find the aggravating trigger.

- Hives tend to cause excessive scratching and grooming. This can result in lesions which can quickly become infected. If your pet has hives, always keep a close eye on the skin and watch out for sores or signs of infection.
- Try bathing your pet in a bath of cool water to relieve itchiness and wash off any irritants that may be causing a reaction. You can also try adding a couple of cups of brewed black or green tea to the bath water as the tannins will help soothe the irritated skin.
- While hives are almost always harmless, they could be the beginning of a far more serious allergic reaction. Severe swelling of the face or any symptoms of breathing difficulties require immediate medical attention.
- Try filling a sock with some Oatmeal Flakes and then run water through the sock. Placing the wet, oatmeal sock on the hives will soothe the skin.

The Natural Approach

While Western medicine has become the norm in many cultures, it is not the only treatment option. Conventional western medicine, often called allopathic medicine, is the system of medicine taught at most medical schools and most pharmaceutical and synthetic medicines are manufactured and marketed according to the principles of allopathic medicine. Allopathic medicine is also sometimes called orthodox medicine.

Because most of us in the Western world have grown up in a society in which allopathic medicine is the prevailing norm, we forget that, only a few decades ago, homeopathic, herbal and other natural medicines were commonly available – and freely used even by conventional doctors and veterinarians. While there are often heated debates about which system of medicine is 'better' than the other, many responsible doctors and vets (whether they are allopathic or not) recognize that both have a role to play in the treatment program.

Just like humans, domesticated animals like dogs and cats are affected by the health hazards of modern living. Pollution, poor nutrition, stress and unhealthy lifestyles can lead to a variety of illnesses and conditions that are very similar to those experienced by humans. In fact, many, if not most pet health concerns can be addressed by helping your pets to live a healthier lifestyle. While it has its place, conventional medicine for animals and 'modern technology' have failed our pets in many ways.

According to pet expert and author CJ Puotinen, most holistic veterinarians and animal health care professions list annual vaccinations and commercial pet foods as the major contributory cause in the rising rates of chronic illness in pets today. Similarly, Juliette de Bairacli Levy, respected author and renowned animal breeder, points out that contrary to the belief that mass vaccination and antibiotic use will contribute to a decrease in disease, the opposite has in fact proved true. Like their human counterparts, today's pets are becoming more and more vulnerable to chronic disease and ill health. This has led many veterinarians to search for alternatives and to espouse more holistic methods of keeping our pets healthy.

"In the wild, animals instinctively seek out healing herbs to help them when they are ill or undernourished. In fact, Asclepius, the ancient Greek god of medicine, respected dogs very highly for their ability to seek out and eat medicinal herbs in the wild. This ability is shared by other animals, including cats. We are coming to realize that nature often has the answers - but animals have always known this! Natural medicine can help your pet just as it can help you. While there is always a place for conventional veterinary medicine, natural medicine can compliment conventional veterinary care and in many cases do just as well. I have applied the same care and research that have gone into our Native Remedies range for adults and children to the development of pet-friendly, safe and effective natural remedies for animals. "When a veterinary surgeon practices the use of homeopathic medicine and is asked why he does so, he may give one of several answers. The simple answer would be that the results are good, an emphatic answer would be that homeopathic treatment has no unpleasant or dangerous side effects, while still achieving successful results.
