Aggression in Horses

What is Horse Aggression?

Horses, like humans and pets tend to have a variety of behavioral problems. These behavioral issues may arise suddenly, after a traumatic experience, or may be deeply rooted in the horse's psyche from past experiences.

Aggression in horses can be a particularly dangerous combination! Some horses may take to biting and kicking, hostile rearing and charging, crowding your space when leading, bumping you with his head or leaning on you.

What Causes Horse Aggression?

Any 'acting out' has a root cause. The cause may be physical (caused by pain, discomfort or disease) or psychological (past abuse or stress and anxiety). It is important to determine the cause of the problem. All horses that exhibit aggressive behavior should undergo a full check up at the vet.

Other causes may include:

- A horse being unhappy in its environment
- Dislike of other horses sharing stables
- Lack of a close relationship at 'ground-level'
- Lack of training
- A horse that is not properly gelded
- Past abuse

Diagnosing Horse Aggression

Because degrees of aggression vary, it is important to watch out for the warning signs of aggression in unsettled or angry horses.

Symptom of equine aggression include:

- Opening the mouth or showing teeth as if to bite
- Pinning ears back
- Biting
- Kicking
- Rearing
- Charging
- Crowding your space when leading
- Bumping you with his head
- Aggressive, vicious noises

Help for Horse Aggression

There are many medications to assist hostile mares that have behavioral issues with underlying aggression. Unfortunately these medications are not without side effects, and while they may help to relax the horse in the short term, their long-term effects are not known.

Furthermore, sedatives and calming drugs can leave a horse's senses dulled – that can make competitive events difficult, as concentration and alertness is required. Speak to your vet about other alternatives.

Natural Remedies

There are many herbal and homeopathic remedies that can help to lessen aggressive tendencies while still keeping your horse alert. Homeopathic ingredients such as Chamomilla, Kali. phos and Cina have been used traditionally for centuries to treat underlying root causes of aggression and promote calmness.

Homeopathic remedies get to work on a cellular level, addressing the horse's imbalances and promoting adequate levels of cell salts in the living cells needed for physical and mental health. Phosphorus and Asarum can also help to strengthen the nervous system in the animal body – promoting sound mental health and addressing nervous disorders.

More Information on Horse Aggression

The first rule for any horse owner is to realize that any horse that gets away with an aggressive act will believe he is dominant over you! Horses operate within a hierarchy. Right from the start, make it very clear to your horse that he/she must not come into your personal space – you are the alpha horse. This is imperative for your safety and the safety of others!

Tips related to Horse Aggression

- Establishing obedience from the ground up. Teach your horse to walk and stop -being mindful of you at all times.
- Reward positive behavior immediately, and reprimand bad behavior immediately- do not whip or spur the horse, but do use low harsh tones and dominant stance.
- It is important to just “be” with your horse. Sit in their paddock with them, talk to them, sit and read a book.
- Clicker training works well with horses that have “issues”.
- Use the word “good” to reward positive behavior on ground level, followed by a food reward.
- For bad behavior, talk in a sharp, low voice and say “Bad!” or “No!” and move towards the horse in an aggressive stance.

Note: If you are struggling to combat your horse's aggressive behavior, talk to a behaviorist or horse expert, who can help you to address volatile behavior and nip it in the bud. Horse aggression should not be taken lightly.

The Natural Approach

While Western medicine has become the norm in many cultures, it is not the only treatment option. Conventional western medicine, often called allopathic medicine, is the system of medicine taught at most medical schools and most pharmaceutical and synthetic medicines are manufactured and marketed according to the principles of allopathic medicine. Allopathic medicine is also sometimes called orthodox medicine.

Because most of us in the Western world have grown up in a society in which allopathic medicine is the prevailing norm, we forget that, only a few decades ago, homeopathic, herbal and other natural medicines were commonly available – and freely used even by conventional doctors and veterinarians. While there are often heated debates about which system of medicine is ‘better’ than the other, many responsible doctors and vets (whether they are allopathic or not) recognize that both have a role to play in the treatment program.

Just like humans, domesticated animals like dogs and cats are affected by the health hazards of modern living. Pollution, poor nutrition, stress and unhealthy lifestyles can lead to a variety of illnesses and conditions that are very similar to those experienced by humans. In fact, many, if not most pet health concerns can be addressed by helping your pets to live a healthier lifestyle. While it has its place, conventional medicine for animals and 'modern technology' have failed our pets in many ways.

According to pet expert and author CJ Puotinen, most holistic veterinarians and animal health care professions list annual vaccinations and commercial pet foods as the major contributory cause in the rising rates of chronic illness in pets today. Similarly, Juliette de Bairacli Levy, respected author and renowned animal breeder, points out that contrary to the belief that mass vaccination and antibiotic use will contribute to a decrease in disease, the opposite has in fact proved true. Like their human counterparts, today's pets are becoming more and more vulnerable to chronic disease and ill health. This has led many veterinarians to search for alternatives and to espouse more holistic methods of keeping our pets healthy.

"In the wild, animals instinctively seek out healing herbs to help them when they are ill or undernourished. In fact, Asclepius, the ancient Greek god of medicine, respected dogs very highly for their ability to seek out and eat medicinal herbs in the wild. This ability is shared by other animals, including cats. We are coming to realize that nature often has the answers - but animals have always known this! Natural medicine can help your pet just as it can help you. While there is always a place for conventional veterinary medicine, natural medicine can compliment conventional veterinary care and in many cases do just as well. I have applied the same care and research that have gone into our Native Remedies range for adults and children to the development of pet-friendly, safe and effective natural remedies for animals. As always, all remedies are formulated to the highest therapeutic standards and manufactured under strict pharmaceutical conditions for your peace of mind and the well being of your pets. " Michele Carelse, Clinical Psychologist.

"When a veterinary surgeon practices the use of homeopathic medicine and is
