OCD

What is Obsessive Compulsive Disorder?

Obsessive Compulsive Disorder (OCD) is an anxiety disorder that can be most debilitating if left untreated. As the name suggests, OCD is characterized by compulsive actions, practices and thoughts which are experienced to such an extent that they interfere significantly with the wellbeing of the individual. This disorder can have devastating effects on occupational, psychological and social functioning. Teen OCD is devastating for the teenager suffering from the disorder and for his family.

People with Obsessive Compulsive Disorder typically struggle to cope with daily life. Even seemingly simple tasks can become daunting and time consuming. However, with the correct treatment, there is much that can be done to improve symptoms as well as quality of life.

Diagnosing Obsessive Compulsive Disorder

A mental health practitioner will ask you to give a detailed picture of your obsessions and/or compulsions. They will also note your feelings towards them and the way it has affected your life functioning in terms of daily routine, occupation, social interactions and relationships.

In order to get a clearer picture and rule out any other disorders, your health care practitioner may request to speak to family members or friends. Once a diagnosis is made, be sure to ask about all possible treatment options and explore which ones would best suit you!

Symptoms of OCD in Adults

OCD is characterized by chronic obsessions and compulsions. Depending on the nature of the disorder, the symptoms of OCD vary and are often personal and unique to the person with the disorder. Symptoms include:

Obsessions

A person with OCD suffers from recurring and persistent intrusive thoughts, images, ideas or impulses over which they have little or no control and which cause considerable distress. The most common obsessions relate to the following themes:

- Aggressive impulses, or the fear that you're going to harm someone
- Contamination; fear of germs or disease
- Sexual content

- The need for symmetry and order – often as a way of warding off bad luck or disaster

We all get the odd thought or idea that pops into our head from time to time. While most of us can easily dismiss it and carry on, for a person with OCD, there seems to be no escaping these thoughts or impulses. Imagine if the thing you feared the most was a thought! The more you try not thinking about the forbidden thought, the stronger it becomes. For example, if you're trying not to think of stabbing someone with a knife, this image is the first thing that comes to mind. Teen OCD is especially isolating since the youngster may suffer from symptoms during class and extracurricular activities and may feel ostracized.

Compulsions

One way to relieve the anxiety associated with these obsessions is to act on compulsions. Compulsions are repetitive behaviors, often intended to produce or prevent some future event or situation. An obsessive concern of contamination would usually result in hand-washing compulsions, while obsessions with symmetry would result in re-arranging and ordering of objects.

In many cases the compulsion is totally unrelated to the obsessive thought, but the action becomes a ritualistic distraction. The individual may realize that these actions are senseless, but feel unable to resist them.

For example, where some of us may superstitiously avoid stepping on cracks in the sidewalk, people with OCD may feel extreme anxiety if they don't give in to this compulsive behavior and often only feel relief when they have done so.

- Common compulsions include:
 - Washing hands over and over again
 - Repetitive checking that appliances are turned off or windows are closed
 - Frequently wiping objects before touching them
 - Collecting and hoarding specific items
 - Counting items over and over
 - Repeating specific words and phrases in a particular order in 'your head'
 - Rearranging things endlessly to create 'balance'
 - Excessive list making
 - Repeating actions in sets of three
 - Having a strict ritual before going to bed that has to be followed exactly

Many of us have learnt about OCD by watching movies or plays about people who are ruled by compulsions such as hand washing, counting and other forms of compulsive behavior. Some examples are 'Macbeth', 'Rain Man' and Jack Nicholson's 'As Good As It Gets'.

Although compulsions are the most well known symptoms of OCD, many people with this condition suffer only from obsessive thoughts. In fact, compulsive behavior is not a prerequisite to the diagnosis of OCD.

Who Suffers from OCD? Is there a Cure?

Research suggests that OCD affects more women than men. OCD usually appears in early adolescence or mid twenties but can start earlier, especially in boys. After initial OCD symptoms start, the severity of the disorder can quickly escalate.

What Causes Obsessive Compulsive Disorder?

There is no definite theory as to what causes OCD. In fact, there are quite a few different potential causes, and different cases can be linked to different roots.

Possible Causes of OCD

Biological Causes

- Genetics - studies suggest that a tendency towards anxiety may be hereditary.
- Brain chemistry abnormalities - Brain imaging studies have shown that people with OCD sometimes show different neuro-chemical brain activities than those without OCD and this condition is strongly associated with imbalances in brain chemistry. However, it is not certain whether these imbalances are caused by the OCD or whether the imbalances existed first.

Psychological Causes

- Strong feelings of guilt and responsibility might lead a person to the idea that thinking something bad is morally just as bad as doing it. "If I think of hitting you, it's morally the same as actually hitting you and so I must be a terrible and violent person."
- Some people feel overly accountable for what happens around them and think certain thoughts are dangerous. "If I think that, it might actually happen and then I will be responsible for it."
- Freudian theory suggests that obsessions and compulsions represent subconscious attempts to suppress guilt associated with unwanted sexual impulses.
- Psychodynamic theory explains obsessions and compulsions as attempts to deal with anxiety originating from the subconscious mind.

Stress

- Stress or trauma can often precipitate or worsen the symptoms of OCD in certain susceptible people. In teen OCD, stressful times during the academic year such as midterms and finals can trigger or worsen symptoms.

Drug Abuse

- OCD may sometimes be precipitated by the use of certain drugs which have the potential to alter brain chemistry.

Prescription Medication

- OCD symptoms may be related to the side effects of some prescription drugs.

Help for Obsessive Compulsive Disorder

There are a wide variety of treatment options for OCD and it is advisable to explore all options before deciding on a treatment plan.

Treatments for OCD

Cognitive Behavioral Therapy (CBT)

This form of obsessive compulsive disorder treatments has been very successful in treating OCD symptoms. Cognitive behavioral therapy encourages the person with OCD to gradually face whatever triggers the compulsive behaviors and also gives the individual the confidence to try and stop them. CBT also empowers the person with constructive ways of dealing with the anxiety that the OCD causes. As CBT works at a safe and steady pace, the long term effects are promising!

Drug Therapy

Several medications have been shown to help with the symptoms of OCD, some of which are clomipramine, fluoxetine, fluvoxamine, sertraline, and paroxetine. While these anti-depressant drugs may be successful at lessening OCD symptoms, they do not address the root cause of the disorder and the symptoms will generally reappear once the medication is stopped.

These drugs also cause unwanted side effects such as dry mouth, nausea, drowsiness, weight gain and loss of libido. Although it was initially thought that these medications did not have the potential to result in dependency, this view has been revised after many reports of withdrawal symptoms experienced when trying to stop the medication.

If you decide that prescription drugs are the best option for you, remember that research indicates that they are best used together with therapy, rather than as a stand alone treatment option.

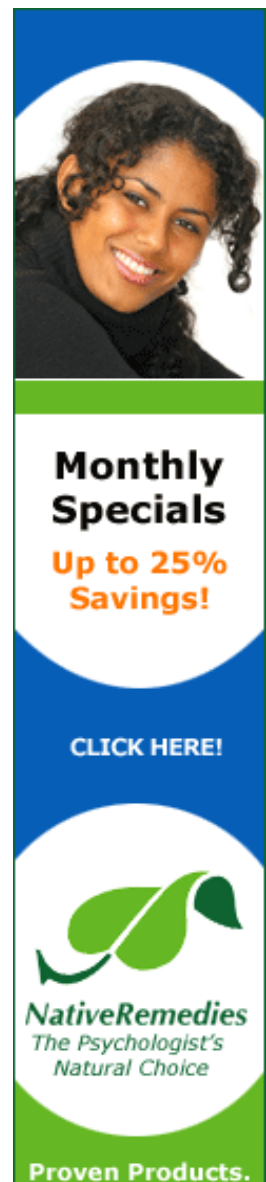

While prescription medication can be effective as part of a broader treatment plan, it is not always necessary for treatment. It is strongly advised that you research these drugs thoroughly and make an informed decision.

Natural Herbal and Homeopathic Remedies

There are a number of herbal and homeopathic remedies which may assist in the struggle against OCD. OCD is strongly associated with imbalances in brain chemistry and there are a number of herbal remedies that have been shown to be effective in restoring chemical balance and neurological health in the brain.

In addition, because anxiety levels contribute significantly to OCD symptoms, herbal and homeopathic remedies that help to reduce anxiety levels may also be of benefit when considering obsessive compulsive disorder treatments. Some herbal remedies often recommended for OCD are Hypericum perforatum (St John's Wort), Passiflora incarnata, Scutellaria laterifolia (Scullcap) and Valerian.

Used alone or in conjunction with psychotherapy, herbal and homeopathic remedies can help relieve anxiety and bring the individual to a holistic balance. A natural approach focuses on treating the individual rather than the symptoms! Other Disorders Related to OCD

It is not uncommon to find other disorders co-existing with OCD. In some cases OCD is accompanied by:

- Other anxiety disorders
- Depression
- Eating disorders
- Substance abuse
- Attention deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD)
- Tourette's syndrome
- Autism
- Asperger's Syndrome
- Mental handicap

Tips for Coping with Obsessive Compulsive Disorder

- Stick to your treatment plan even though it may seem difficult and daunting at first.
- Therapies such as Cognitive Behavioral Therapy (CBT) may take some time before improvement is noted. Many people with OCD give up too soon, believing that the therapy will not help them. However, those who persevere usually experience significant improvement, thereby reducing the need for prescription drugs.
- Do your own research. Understanding your disorder will help you to cope with it.
- Seek support from loved ones who can offer encouragement during difficult times.
- Find a support group where you can share your difficulties and learn from the experiences of others. Speaking about your obsessive thoughts can often help to reduce the power they have over you.
- Avoid negative coping mechanisms such as illicit drugs and alcohol.
- Participate in social activities. Do not isolate yourself.
- Healing is an ongoing process, so be patient with your recovery progress.

While Western medicine has become the norm in many cultures, it is not the only treatment option. Conventional western medicine, often called allopathic medicine, is the system of medicine taught at most medical schools and most pharmaceutical and synthetic medicines are manufactured and marketed according to the principles of allopathic medicine. Allopathic medicine is also sometimes called orthodox medicine.

Because most of us in the Western world have grown up in a society in which allopathic medicine is the prevailing norm, we forget that, only a few decades ago, homeopathic, herbal and other natural medicines were commonly available – and freely used even by conventional doctors. While there are often heated debates about which system of medicine is ‘better’ than the other, many responsible doctors (whether they are allopathic or not) recognize that both have a role to play in the treatment program.

Natural medicine has often been frowned on by conventional doctors, especially by those who did not have sufficient knowledge of these medicines. However, it is encouraging to note that some medical schools are now beginning to re-introduce it into their course work, thereby providing doctors with a wider range of treatment options from which to choose. In many countries, especially in Europe, India and China, natural and homeopathic medicines are commonly prescribed by conventional doctors and represent a significant part of the total annual drug sales.

Naturopathy is a branch of medicine (just as allopathy is a branch of medicine) which operates according to the underlying philosophy that the body has an innate capacity to heal itself. While natural medicines are often called ‘alternative’ or ‘complimentary’ medicines, they are, in fact, a unique and independent form of medicine in their own right, well able to treat a variety of conditions. Perhaps the term ‘holistic’ medicine is more apt, given the broad range of treatment options and approaches which are to be found within the practice of natural medicine, which encompasses many different disciplines, including herbalism, homeopathy, iridology, osteopathy, chiropractic, therapeutic massage techniques, aromatherapy, acupuncture and many, many more.

Most naturopaths will use a variety of treatment modalities in order to treat their patients in a holistic way to support health, relieve symptoms and prevent future disease. In fact, even the World Health Organization defines health as being "... more than simply the absence of illness. It is the active state of physical, emotional, mental and social well-being." This is a wonderfully clear description of holistic or natural medicine, which strives to support health (thereby relieving or preventing symptoms), rather than simply eliminating disease.

Although allopathic medicine certainly has a role to play and has made a tremendous contribution to medical science during the past century, there is a growing perception that it is not the only answer and that, in many cases, holistic medicine can accomplish just as much, if not more – without the risk of side effects, addiction and sacrifice to health so commonly associated with pharmaceutical drugs. Contrary to common perception, and provided that they are manufactured in the correct way, natural medicines can work quickly and safely to promote healing.

In many cases, they can succeed where pharmaceutical drugs have failed. Despite frequent reports that they are ‘unproven’ and ‘untested’, the opposite is true. Natural medicines have a long history of usage and there is a wealth of empirical evidence to support their effectiveness and safety. In addition, active clinical research is carried out by many academic hospitals and universities to support the extensive traditional and empirical evidence behind natural medicines.

It is also important to know that, like any medicine, herbal and homeopathic consultants ready to advise you on the best choice for your health.

medicines must be manufactured in the correct way, following acceptable procedures and manufacturing methods to ensure maximum effectiveness and safety. Due to the recent rise in popularity of natural remedies, many companies have sprung up to take advantage of the market. Unfortunately not all of them are equipped to manufacture to the correct standards, often resulting in a flood of inferior (and sometimes even unsafe) remedies onto the market – and giving natural remedies a bad name.

Even some pharmaceutical companies have rushed to claim their market share by producing so-called ‘standardized’ extracts of herbs and offering these as superior to the tried and tested methods of naturopathic manufacturing. Nothing could be further from the truth. While ‘standardized’ extracts may offer benefit of easy consistency of dosage (and cheaper more efficient production lines), they have grave disadvantages. These include an increase in side effects as the medicines produced in this manner lose the natural protective properties of the herbs. In some cases, these side effects have proved fatal – as was seen in the liver toxicity associated with standardized extracts of kava kava, a herb previously safely used for generations without any known side effects.

Most naturopaths recommend what is called the Full Spectrum Method of extraction – which retains the benefits of ALL the active ingredients within the herb as opposed to isolating only one – thereby providing a more complete treatment as well as superior protection against side effects.

Whatever your choice, always choose wisely. Research what is best for you. If you have a chronic or life threatening condition, don’t make changes without first discussing them with your doctor in order that your condition may be monitored. Well informed and supportive practitioners will support patients who want to take responsibility for their own health.

Common Questions Asked About Holistic Health Distance Learning Courses:

What is Certification?

Most schools will offer an exam that tests the student's knowledge of the material taught in the respective course. Upon successful completion of this exam, a Certificate or Diploma will be issued by the school attesting that the student has successfully met the requirements as specified by that school. The only governmental recognition of Aromatherapy in North America is the occupational title designation granted to the BCAA under the Societies Act of British Columbia.

What is a Certified Aromatherapist or Reflexologist?

Most prospective students want to know whether taking our courses will lead to their becoming 'Certified' in that healing modality, thereby leading to the title of Certified Aromatherapist, Certified Reflexologist or Certified Color/Crystal Therapist. The answer to this really depends on what you mean by 'Certified.' We believe it can be misleading to purport that completing a course in a healing modality such as reflexology, aromatherapy or color/crystal therapy will lead to a designation of 'Certified' Therapist. These are not official title designations nor are they ones which are recognized by any country's governmental body. All that these titles mean is that this is what an Individual Instructor, School or Institution decided to put on the Diploma it awards those who successfully complete their course.

What is an accredited course in Aromatherapy or Reflexology?

The answer to this will depend on who you are asking. At the present time, British Columbia is the only government to recognize Aromatherapy as a distinct profession and has granted Occupational Title Protection to the members of the BCAA (British Columbia Alliance of Aromatherapy) with the exclusive right for its members to call themselves Registered Aromatherapists (R.A.).

At this time, neither Reflexology nor Color/Crystal Therapy have such occupational designations in any country although one prominent Reflexology school in Colorado, The Modern Institute of Reflexology, has gained occupational designation for their institution in that state. MIR has been designated by the Colorado State Division of Private Occupational Schools - Dept. of Higher Education as an approved school. Our Reflexologist who developed the reflexology modules for our courses was trained at MIR as a Certified Reflexologist, a Master Reflexologist and a Dr. of Reflexology.

In the United States, the NAHA (National Association for Holistic Aromatherapy) has put into place their Approved Standards for Aromatherapy Training. The Alternative Healing Academy's Advanced Aromatherapy course meets and exceeds these standards and we are in the application process of becoming an approved program through the NAHA.

In Canada, there are a number of different Associations including the BCAPA (British Columbia Association of Practicing Aromatherapists) and the CFA (Canadian Federation of Aromatherapists). Time will tell if one authoritative body or association becomes the standard by which to judge and govern the educational offerings of these alternative healing modalities.

It has to be noted that NO form of aromatherapy "certification" is currently recognized in the USA by anyone other than those in the trade, nor is aromatherapy (or essential oils in the aromatherapy trade) regulated by any governmental body.

Some information about the courses we offer:

1) You can receive the course in one of two ways: A cd with the modules and tests in PDF format can be shipped to you; or, The modules can be emailed to you three at a time. Each time you complete the tests for the current three modules, a new set of three modules will be emailed to you.

You will be contacted after purchase to find out how you would like your course delivered. All tests for the course can be either emailed or snail-mailed to The Alternative Healing Academy.

Going through the final and the case studies and having such amazing experiences and opportunities to help people, I truly feel blessed and honored to have had the intense education that came with this course. I discovered in me a new ability to serve others, not only through education but through the power of healing that comes with the use of essential oils. I am continuing to train personally with Alexandria Brighton and have begun work toward opening an aromatherapy practice. Thank you so much for your patience and knowledge. Most of all thank you for this new way of living and enjoying Life."

-A. Lindquist - Advanced Aromatherapy Practitioner

"I am finding the course great. It is written very well so even people like me can understand the human body a whole lot better. I just hope that I can remember it all. I don't think I have a chance of remembering the names of everything in the muscular system or the movement system. But, I do have more of an understanding of how everything works now. I find it just amazing. Thanks Heaps."

-M. Oliver - Basic Anatomy & Physiology

"This information is great that you are teaching. I would really like to talk my oldest daughter into taking your course. It really goes into detail which is very informative."

-Debbie F. - Basic Reflexology

"Seven years ago I started to see a reflexologist for migraines and sinus problems. I was amazed that I finally found relief without medication. I decided this year to search out a course in reflexology so I could help family and friends and show them the benefits of reflexology. I researched various courses on the internet and decided to go with the basic course through the Alternative Healing Academy. I was impressed with course material and the ease of receiving the course material."

"I was given an choice of having a CD sent to me or to receiving and sending back the assignments through email. I choose email. I received 3 lessons at a time that I could read and study on my own time frame and return the lessons when I was done. Everything was sent in a very timely manner and communication was open and quick. If I needed help, I knew it was only a click away and the response time was very quick. The techniques used also came in a video mode in the email that I could replay as much as I needed to."

"I felt I learned a lot and am able to help myself and others. Being able to log 20 hours of treatment time and writing the case histories for the final exam was extremely rewarding and helpful.
