Warts on Pets

What are Warts?

Warts are clusters of abnormal cells that appear as round growths on the skin, particularly around the eyes and mouth. In dogs these growths are called viral papillomas. They often have jagged edges and may seem cauliflower-like in appearance. While warts are often unsightly, the good news is that they are usually harmless and seldom pose a health risk to your pet. But how did your pet get them in the first place?

What Causes Warts?

Warts are caused by the Papillomavirus (PV) which is a virus that actually stimulates the skin cells to produce the wart. Infection can occur when your dog comes into contact with another infected dog or picks up the virus from the environment; however the virus is more common in pets with immature or weakened immune systems.

Diagnosing Warts

Once your pet is infected, the warts usually appear within a month to two months and in most cases your pet will present with multiple warts. As your pet's immune system becomes more mature the warts should start to disappear, with most cases resolving within 1-5 months.

Natural remedies

Herbal and homeopathic remedies can be used to assist in the speedy recovery from warts. Many natural ingredients have been used for centuries to treat a number of skin conditions including warts. Fucus vesiculosus is often used in the treatment of skin conditions and to promote healthy skin and coat.

Spirulina can also be used and works by supplying rich nutrients to the skin as well as improving the body's resistance to viruses and disease. Other herbs that can be used to help treat warts include Horsetail and Dandelion which help enrich the skin and promote skin healing on a cellular level.

Tips for treating warts

- If your pet has warts, then veterinary treatment is often not necessary unless complications occur. However, what you may think are harmless warts may turn out to be something more sinister and so an accurate diagnosis by your local veterinarian is important.

Always seek the advice of your veterinarian or other qualified health provider with any questions you may have regarding a medical condition.

Never disregard professional medical advice or delay in seeking it because of something you have read in this ebook or on ANY website.

- Try applying some vitamin E oil directly to the wart. This can be repeated a few times a day for a few weeks.
- Applying castor oil to the wart can soften it and thus reduce irritation and discomfort.
- Prevention is always better than cure so make sure that your pet's immune system is strong so that it can easily fight off viruses such as those that cause the warts in the first place. A healthy immune system will also encourage faster healing after infection.

The Natural Approach

While Western medicine has become the norm in many cultures, it is not the only treatment option. Conventional western medicine, often called allopathic medicine, is the system of medicine taught at most medical schools and most pharmaceutical and synthetic medicines are manufactured and marketed according to the principles of allopathic medicine. Allopathic medicine is also sometimes called orthodox medicine.

Because most of us in the Western world have grown up in a society in which allopathic medicine is the prevailing norm, we forget that, only a few decades ago, homeopathic, herbal and other natural medicines were commonly available – and freely used even by conventional doctors and veterinarians. While there are often heated debates about which system of medicine is 'better' than the other, many responsible doctors and vets (whether they are allopathic or not) recognize that both have a role to play in the treatment program.

Just like humans, domesticated animals like dogs and cats are affected by the health hazards of modern living. Pollution, poor nutrition, stress and unhealthy lifestyles can lead to a variety of illnesses and conditions that are very similar to those experienced by humans. In fact, many, if not most pet health concerns can be addressed by helping your pets to live a healthier lifestyle. While it has its place, conventional medicine for animals and 'modern technology' have failed our pets in many ways.

According to pet expert and author CJ Puotinen, most holistic veterinarians and animal health care professions list annual vaccinations and commercial pet foods as the major contributory cause in the rising rates of chronic illness in pets today. Similarly, Juliette de Bairacli Levy, respected author and renowned animal breeder, points out that contrary to the belief that mass vaccination and antibiotic use will contribute to a decrease in disease, the opposite has in fact proved true. Like their human counterparts, today's pets are becoming more and more vulnerable to chronic disease and ill health. This has led many veterinarians to search for alternatives and to espouse more holistic methods of keeping our pets healthy.

"In the wild, animals instinctively seek out healing herbs to help them when they are ill or undernourished. In fact, Asclepius, the ancient Greek god of medicine, respected dogs very highly for their ability to seek out and eat medicinal herbs in the wild. This ability is shared by other animals, including cats. We are coming to realize that nature often has the answers - but animals have always known this! Natural medicine can help your pet just as it can help you. While there is always a place for conventional veterinary medicine, natural medicine can compliment conventional veterinary care and in many cases do just as well. "When a veterinary surgeon practices the use of homeopathic medicine and is asked why he does so, he may give one of several answers. The simple answer would be that the results are good, an emphatic answer would be that homeopathic treatment has no unpleasant or dangerous side effects, while still achieving successful results.

The PetAlive Homeopathic range has been formulated with this knowledge and is specifically designed to treat your pet in a holistic and natural manner."
